

Carmen Diaz-Amigo is a food safety specialist with experience in food testing, scientific information analysis, and the communication of technical topics to different audiences. As an FAO consultant, Carmen focuses on the critical evaluation of scientific evidence on interactions between regulated substances, the gut microbiome, and the host. She has collaborated with other experts on gap analysis to support the integration of gut microbiome data into food safety chemical risk assessment.